Douglas Charles Sanders, Professor of Horticultural Science at North Carolina State University, Raleigh, better known as Doug, was respected worldwide for his expertise in vegetable production. Doug developed his love of plants and horticulture at a young age while growing up on a family farm in Mason, Michigan. He received his Bachelor of Science degree in Vegetable Crops in 1965 from Michigan State University and his M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in Horticulture in 1967 and 1970, respectively, from the University of Minnesota. Doug began his professional career at North Carolina State University in 1970 as an assistant professor specializing in Vegetable Production and was promoted to full professor in 1982.

Dr. Sanders was tirelessly committed to the teaching and research of vegetable production systems and their application worldwide. His life was filled with numerous accomplishments and recognitions as he provided leadership in many facets of the vegetable industry. Doug worked closely with North Carolina farmers and county extension agents to improve their vegetable production knowledge. His advice was sought after by all who worked with vegetables not only in NC, but also in the U.S and around the world. His accomplishments included the establishment of the NC Vegetable Growers Association, the introduction of numerous new vegetable technologies (drip irrigation, plasticulture, precision seeding) and the introduction of new crops to NC such as asparagus, broccoli, sweet onions and leaf lettuce. Dr. Sanders served as Vice President of the Extension Division of the American Society for Horticultural Science (ASHS) in 1992-93. In 1992 Doug was named a Fellow of ASHS, and he received (posthumously) the Outstanding International Horticulturist award at the ASHS Annual Conference in New Orleans in July 2006. He was President of the Southern Region ASHS in 2000.

Doug distinguished himself as an international horticulturist with 38 trips abroad in the last two decades. Dr. Sanders mentored many students from Uruguay, Venezuela, Peru, Chile, China and Thailand.

Dr. Sanders taught undergraduate and graduate courses and utilized new distance education technologies to reach audiences across North Carolina. He personally advised 21 graduate students. Doug was a tireless worker with a passion for horticultural science and seemingly boundless amounts of energy. All who knew him benefited from his innovative ideas, unselfish encouragement and thoughtfulness.

Doug passed away after a brief illness on Monday, April 17, 2006. His loving wife Ellen and sister, Mary Sanders, survive him.

To honor his memory and contributions to horticulture, this endowment has been established to benefit research activities on sustainable vegetable production and food safety. The term sustainable is used in the broadest sense to indicate environmentally sound production practices that are compatible with profitability for growers.

This endowment will be titled, “Douglas C. and Ellen J. Sanders Horticultural Research Endowment,” and managed by the North Carolina Agricultural Foundation. The endowment has been established to provide support for research in the area of sustainable vegetable production and/or food safety in the Horticultural Science Department at NC State University. The income from the endowment will support graduate students’ research on sustainable vegetable production and/or food safety in the Department on a competitive, proposal basis.
