

EXSICCATAE OF MISSOURI DESMODIUM (FABACEAE)

Abstract. Herbarium voucher specimens of Desmodium (Fabaceae) from Missouri were examined in preparation of a treatment of the genus for Steiermark's Flora of Missouri, Vol. 2.

Keywords: Flora of Missouri, Desmodium, Fabaceae, exsiccatae.

The standard reference for Missouri plants for the last four decades has been the Flora of Missouri (Steiermark 1963). A new comprehensive treatment, Steiermark's Flora of Missouri, is currently being prepared with volume 1, covering the ferns, conifers, and monocots, already completed (Yatskievych 1999). The two remaining volumes will cover the dicot families. A treatment of Desmodium Desv. (Fabaceae) has been submitted for inclusion in volume 2. The present paper lists the voucher specimens examined and provides distributional documentation of species ranges. In addition the identifications of published and unpublished collections have been confirmed.

METHODS

Herbarium specimens of Desmodium were examined and annotated from eight herbaria that were particularly relevant to the project focus. All data were recorded from most specimens with the primary exceptions being vouchers that included extensive 'form' habitat information. The recording of multiple collectors was not consistent and some citations list only the first collector.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

Twenty species are recognized as occurring spontaneously in Missouri and all are considered native elements of the flora. The label information from the herbarium voucher specimens examined are listed. For convenience, two additional taxa, D. cuspidatum (Muhl. ex Willd.) DC. ex Loudon var. longifolium (Torr. & A. Gray) B.G. Schub. and D. x humifusum (Muhl. ex Bigelow) L.C. Beck, are segregated for reasons elaborated below.

The taxa are listed alphabetically with the specimens within each taxon grouped by county. The county names are in bold type to aid in browsing and the initial word of each new specimen capitalized. Collector names and numbers are italicized with "s.n." (sine numero) used when no collection number was assigned. Certain common words are abbreviated (see Table 1). Standard herbarium acronyms (Holmgren et al. 1990) are used except for the herbarium designated as 'Powell.' This collection is the fourth largest in the state but has never been listed in Index Herbariorum. It was amassed by Dr. Norlan Henderson primarily while at the University of Missouri-Kansas City and since shortly after his retirement in 1986 this herbarium has been housed at Powell Botanical Gardens, Kingsville, Missouri. Author abbreviations follow the traditional Brummit & Powell (1992) style as given at the 'The International Plant Names Index' web site: <http://www.ipni.org/index.html>.

Most locations in Missouri can be described using standard township/range/section designations and these are included when used by the collectors. They are presented in the format "T28N R14E S09" for township 28 north, range 14 east, section nine. Any subdivisions of a section (e.g. SW1/4) immediately precede the section. Primarily along the Mississippi River there were Spanish land grants that predate and supersede the stan-

The author thanks the curators of the following herbaria: KANU, MWSJ, MO, NEMO, SMS, UMO, WARM, and Norlan Henderson of Powell Botanical Gardens (Powell) for sending loans or allowing visits. Robin Kennedy (UMO) provided valuable comments that improved the manuscript. George Yatskievych (MO) facilitated many aspects of this project including providing access to specimens loaned to him from the Field Museum (F). Partial funding was provided by the MO Dept. of Conservation.

A more extensive discussion of the taxonomic and nomenclatural complexity of this group will be presented elsewhere (in prep.) but a few comments are required to explain the annotations. Those specimens passing as D. cuspidatum var. longifolium include a wide variety of morphologies. The most common morphology placed in this variety strongly resembles the typical D. cuspidatum var. cuspidatum except for more profound pubescence on the stems and leaves. Other specimens have multiple traits that grade toward D. perplexum B.G. Schub. or D. canadense (L.) DC. at one extreme or D. canescens (L.) DC. at another. Some of these specimens could represent hybrids with other species but no documentation of hybridization has been published. Until further research clarifies the status of the aberrant individuals, it seems most prudent to segregate the extreme forms of D. cuspidatum into a different variety rather than expanding the concept of this otherwise well-defined species.

The most difficult species complex in this genus in Missouri contains D. glabellum (Michx.) DC., D. paniculatum (L.) DC., and D. perplexum. Detailed morphological examination of the group by Isely lead initially to the recognition of one species (Isely 1953) but a different conclusion was reached upon reexamination of the group when three species were recognized (Isely 1983). These three species show little ecological differentiation and frequently occur together where they usually maintain consistent, if minor, differences. Only occasionally are sites found where the species-specific differences break down by either having a number of plants with a single atypical combination of traits or more rarely several different combinations of atypical traits (pers. obs.). Allozyme evidence indicates that local interspecific hybridization may be responsible for the population-level mixing of morphologically distinguishing traits (Raveill 1995). The differentiation of these three species based on herbarium specimens is much more problematic than in the field. The ideal D. paniculatum has narrow leaflets that are at least 3.5 times longer than broad and at most short, strigose pubescence on the stems and leaves. Numerous specimens are encountered that most closely resemble this species but do not match the ideals. Leaflets as wide as 2.5 times longer than broad are found as well as specimens with various degrees of pilose and/or uncinulate pubescence on the stem. The specimens with leaflet dimensions typical of this species but with very dense pubescence are marked with an asterisk.

The other two species in this complex, D. glabellum and D. perplexum, have broader leaflets (<3.5 x) and have more pronounced pubescence. Desmodium glabellum has prominently reticulate leaflets with obtuse apices, shorter petioles, and stem pubescence that is largely composed of uncinulate hairs. The aptly named D. perplexum occurs in a variety of forms but generally has leaflets with less obvious veins and more acute apices, longer petioles, and the stem pubescence that consists of a mixture of uncinulate and pilose hairs. While the stem pubescence is the easiest trait to use in separating these extremely similar species, it is highly variable and should not be used exclusively. In most every population of D. glabellum, at least a few individuals will have pilose hairs at the nodes and sometimes the pilose hairs extend in lines for a short distance below the nodes. Perhaps 20% of herbarium specimens cannot be readily placed into one or the other of these two species and some nearly glabrous specimens of both closely approach D. paniculatum.

The continued recognition of these three species is highly questionable and perhaps all should be combined under D. paniculatum, the name that has priority. Further research of this complex is clearly warranted.

Recent allozyme evidence has indicated that D. x humifusum in New England is a hybrid between D. paniculatum and D. rotundifolium (Michx.) DC. and likely consists of both F<sub>1</sub> and later generation hybrids (Raveill 2002). Because this taxon appears to be a reoccurring hybrid it will not be treated separately in Steysmark's Flora of Missouri but because of distinctive morphology and long history of separate consideration, vouchers specimens are cited separately. The hybrid situation in Missouri may be more complex than in New England. Based on field observations in Missouri, D. glabellum or D. perplexum might also serve as one parent of this hybrid. Since the three species in the D. paniculatum complex are very closely related and perhaps conspecific, it would not be surprising if all members of the complex were interfertile with D. rotundifolium.
